

CAH Award for Innovation in Health Care Delivery

(August 2017)

The Centre on Aging and Health Award for Innovation in Health Care Delivery serves to recognize Regina-based individuals, groups, or organization offering health care to older adults who has introduced an innovative approach to service provision or who has conducted field research to evaluate services or programs for older persons. Winners will be presented with the award during a Centre on Aging and Health-organized event open to the public (e.g., at the annual University of Regina Centre on Aging & Health (CAH) Distinguished Lecture). Award winners will also be featured in the CAH Newsletter and on the CAH website. The winner will be presented with commemorative certificate and will be offered formal affiliation with the CAH. The award does not have monetary value.

Eligibility and Adjudication Criteria:

- 1) Nominees cannot be full-time University of Regina employees.
- 2) The activity recognized should be taking place within the greater Regina metropolitan area. In exceptional circumstances, we will consider outstanding individuals or groups working and based in rural areas elsewhere in Saskatchewan.
- 3) Nominators can only nominate one group, organization, or individual per year.
- 4) The primary criterion will be the formal introduction of an innovation that improves health care (including prevention) for an older person or for older people and/or successfully advocates action leading to health care improvement and/or systematically evaluates services for older adults, making recommendations that have led to implemented improvements.
- 5) Up to one award will be given per calendar year. The award does not have to be given every year. The adjudication committee will make that decision.
- 6) The award does not have monetary value.
